MESSAGE

I am happy to know that Dr. B. R. Ambedkar University Delhi has developed a Course Compendium on Bhartiya Knowledge Systems.

India has a long and distinguished intellectual tradition, where knowledge was not only pursued for its own sake but also for the welfare of society. Our ancient thinkers and practitioners made remarkable contributions in philosophy, mathematics, medicine, literature, architecture, and environmental knowledge. These traditions demonstrate the continuity of Indian civilization and its ability to combine wisdom with innovation.

At a time when higher education must both preserve heritage and respond to contemporary challenges, this compendium is a timely and meaningful initiative. It provides students and scholars with an opportunity to engage with diverse streams of Indian knowledge in a structured manner, and to reflect on their relevance in today's rapidly changing world.

I commend the University for this valuable effort. I am confident that the course compendium on Bhartiya Knowledge Systems will inspire both rigorous study and creative inquiry, helping the youth of Delhi and India to remain connected to their roots while contributing to global knowledge.
